WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

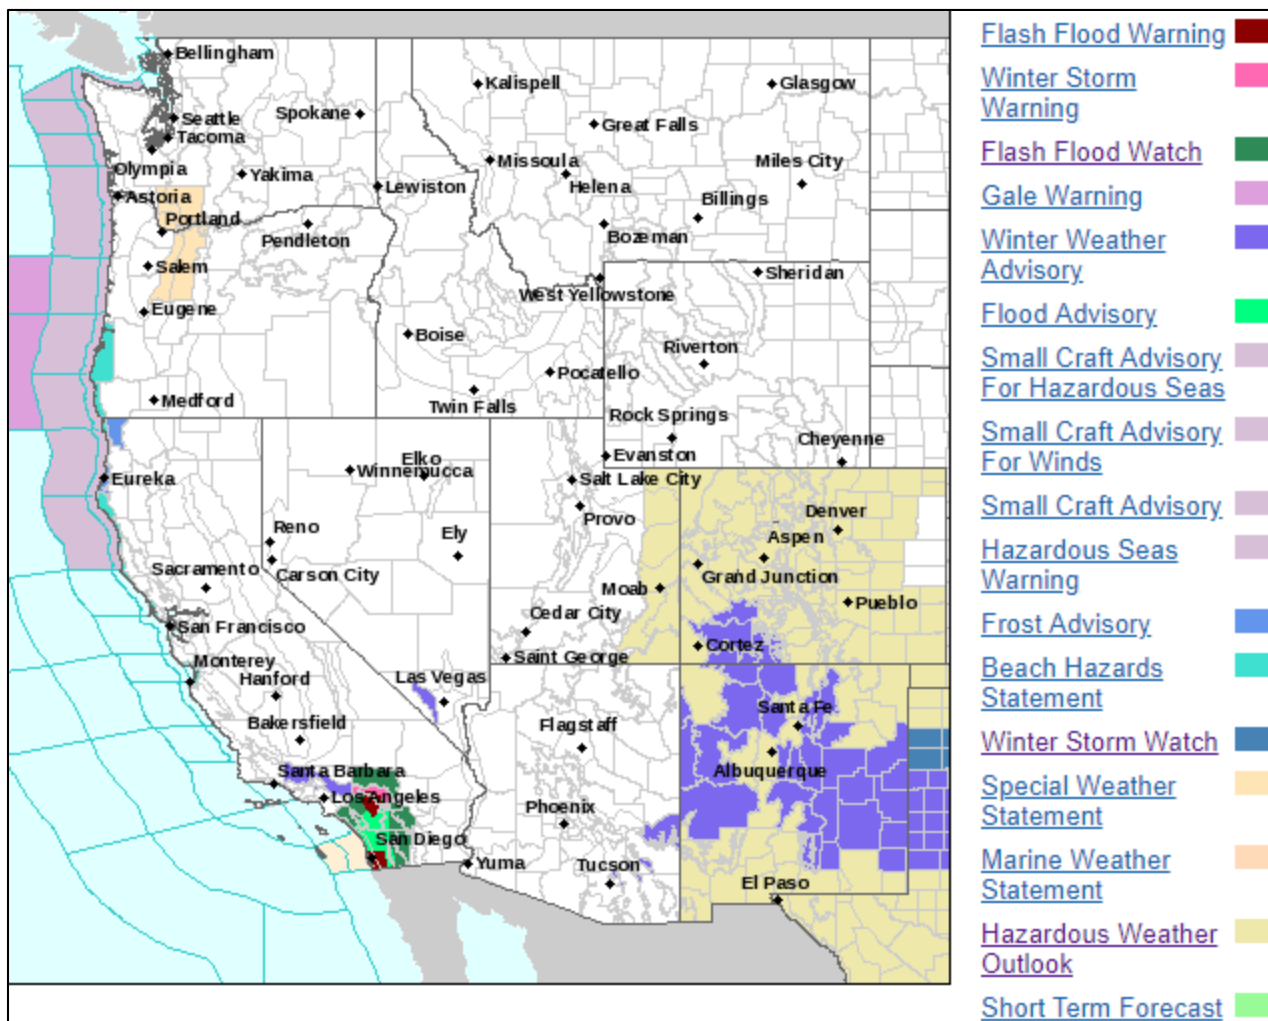

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

- An unsettled weather pattern will continue over the region for some time.
- A low pressure trough centered along the central California coast will be moving SE today with high pressure taking over the weather pattern across the region.
- Today through Saturday will be dry for most locations. There will be a weak weather system passing by to the north Friday that is expected to bring some light rain to the NW counties Friday night.
- A stronger weather system will arrive Sunday with more widespread precipitation that will linger into Monday.
- A dry spell will follow the middle of next week with more precipitation possible again the end of next week.
- Snow levels will lower quite a bit Monday and may reach down to around 2,000 feet over the northern areas, then be quite a bit higher the rest of next week.
- For the most part, winds will be fairly light, although some gusty SE to S winds are expected to develop at times, mostly over the northern areas.
- Temperatures will be close to seasonal normals in all areas with the warmest locations generally near 60 for highs and mostly mid 40s for lows.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

- An area of low pressure currently just off the Southern California Coast will move inland into Northern Baja early Friday morning. A weak ridge of high pressure will build into California from the Pacific Ocean Friday through this weekend. Another area of low pressure will form over Northern California Monday and then drop south into Southern California Tuesday. A weak ridge of high pressure will build into California from the Pacific Ocean next Wednesday and Thursday.
- Showers will end from north to south through the day and finally end across Southern California late tonight.
- Most locations over Southern California will receive an additional 0.25 to 1.50 inches of rainfall, while most of Central California receives less than a quarter inch of additional rainfall through tonight.
- The snow level will be around 6,000 feet.
- Temperatures will be 5 to 10 degrees below normal, with mid 30s to mid 40s across the mountains and 50s to low 60s in the valleys.
- A warming and drying trend will occur Friday through this weekend.
- Temperatures will be near to a little below normal this weekend, with 40s to low 50s across the mountains and mid 50s to upper 60s in the valleys.
- Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% this weekend.
- Scattered showers with light rainfall totals will spread from north to south across Central California Monday and then develop across Southern California Tuesday.
- Temperatures will cool early next week and be between 5 and 10 degrees below normal by Tuesday.
- Temperatures will warm a little and humidity will become low across the region next Wednesday and Thursday.
